Der Deutscher Verein Christmas Memory Book

Think back to the earliest Christmas you can remember. About what year was it? What do you remember doing that year for Christmas? Where were you?

What were the gifts that were exchanged?

Do you have a Christmas memory that you feel is uniquely German?

Do you have a family tradition that symbolizes Christmas to you?

Was looking to get a list of Jasper Christmas traditions.

When you send your Dues for 2017, please include your Christmas memory.

I look forward to reading all about what makes Christmas special to you, your history and your traditions.

German Green Pickle Ornament Tradition

For those of you who have never heard the German Green pickle ornament tradition, it goes something like this... every year when the Christmas Tree is decorated, the LAST ornament on the tree (hung by mom and dad) is a green glass pickle. On Christmas morning, the first child to find the Pickle Ornament on the Tree would get an extra gift.

Did anyone spot the red flag?? (hint... Christmas MORNING) In Germany, the tree is revealed, and presents are given on Christmas Eve.

German Pickle Ornament Story

The truth is not quite as magical... There are several pickle story theories, but the one that seems most valid goes like this.

In the 1890s German Immigrants were flooding into America, bringing with them customs and traditions, including, the Christmas Tree. Woolworths had loads of these new ornaments, and in among the blown glass vegetables were pickle ornaments that no one was buying (who wants a pickle ornament on their tree? It would scare the cat!). So, a marketing genius kicked his brain into high gear, and created a story about the Christmas Pickle... and the green glass pickles flew off the shelves. Suddenly, this German Tradition (which had never been heard of in Germany) was all the rage!

German Christmas Customs Traditions

German Christmas customs traditions and practices can be celebrated here in America. There really is something special about this time of year that makes me look back to my childhood. The candle light, the smell of chocolate and cookies, the wonder of the Christmas Tree.

German Christmas Eve Tradition

There was a special feeling on Christmas Eve. We would come in from Church Services, and we girls would have to wait outside while my parents went to see if der Weinachtsman (Santa) had arrived. Then we would be brought in to the living room, the only lights would come from the Christmas Tree and candles that were lit around the room. Under the tree were presents. The pyramids would be spinning. My father would have put German Christmas music on the record player, and we would all sing. My sister and I would be vibrating just a bit with anticipation.

Finally, we would sing "Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht", and as the song ended, there was a moment of calm. We would all kiss and wish each other a Frohe Weihnachten... and then there were presents, warm drinks, treats and laughter.

I try to carry on this tradition for my kids. It's not always easy, being so different from what their friends are doing. But, I want them to have that same feeling of wonder. Of being led into a candle-lit room... of singing... of being together.

German Holidays Traditions For Your Home

Traditional German Christmas Recipes for Cookies and Treats can be made and served. Homes are adorned with traditional Christmas Decorations like Wooden Angels, Hand Carved Santas, Pyramids that Spin with lit Candles, Glass Ornaments, Advent Wreaths, Nutcrackers and Smokers. Ornaments might be simple or elaborate... but often they are hand made, and are destined to become family heirlooms, passed from generation to generation.

Other decorations for a German Household might include embroidered Tablecloths, Table Toppers and special Holiday Dishes. Windows are hung with Fenster Bilder (window pictures), or glass balls. Electric Candles are placed on Windowsills to welcome people in from the Darkness.(taken from www.germangirlinamerica.com)
